Public Health Toolkit to Boost Local Business Engagement

A new toolkit is launched today to support local authorities to get greater buy in from local businesses to the public health agenda. It contains simple actions which businesses could take to improve staff and customer health and well-being, such as employers encouraging active travel among their staff, promoting smoking cessation or catering outlets reducing salt in their foods. The toolkit has been developed by the Department of Health, working with local authorities, the Local Government Association, Public Health England, and local businesses. The toolkit takes the work that has been done at a national level through the Public Health Responsibility Deal and makes this relevant for local authorities and local businesses. Engagement with small businesses on public health is best led locally - using the knowledge, contacts and expertise that local authorities have. Use this link to access the document.

This second annual report on how well people with dementia are living found that over half of the general public believe that people with dementia have a bad quality of life. This was echoed in the feedback from people with dementia with 70% saying they had stopped doing things they used to do because of lack of confidence. The majority of people with dementia also felt anxious or depressed, and a third of people said they'd lost friends after a diagnosis. It calls on commissioners to ensure appropriate support services are available, and urges people and organisations to play their part in helping ensure their communities are dementia friendly.
